Kenneth Determann posted:

Several years ago, Bree and I were a two-person team assigned to calculate, design and implement storage for materials at our new facility off-site of the main production facility. Although there was always competition from various departments for the use of the limited number of forklifts, Bree always managed to have one shortly after the start of her shift. I found out later Bree was resourceful in storing the forklift she needed to use behind several strategically placed pallets of finished goods so that it was not easily found by the competitors for that equipment and she could locate it for use each day. I don't think we could have got the things we needed to do to be successful without Bree's resourcefulness.:PKen Determann
